

Jeffrey Hergenrather is a general practitioner specializing in cannabis/cannabinoid medicine since 1999. His medical experience includes 26 years in emergency medicine and private general practice. His involvement in the field of cannabis medicine dates back to 1977 when as a physician at 'The Farm', a kibbutz-like intentional community, he learned of the utility and safety of cannabis in a wide variety of conditions for which cannabis was used. He continues in a cannabis consultation practice in northern California with face-to-face, telephone, and on-line consultations in the use of cannabis medicines.

Dr. Hergenrather's practice, research, and teaching focus on the medicinal use of cannabis through a wide range of conditions and age groups - from infants to end-of-life care. Currently, much of his focus is on treating elderly patients with dementias, pain, mental disorders, and degenerative diseases.

He is a founding member and recent past-president of the Society of Cannabis Clinicians, a non-profit corporation dedicated to quality patient care, education, clinical studies, and physician practice standards. The SCC is the oldest organization of physicians specializing in the use of cannabis as medicine.
